

Jeffrey M. Cohen, Ph.D.

As Associate Director for Education in the Division of Human Subjects Protection of the Office for Protection from Research Risks (OPRR), Jeff Cohen is responsible for OPRR's human subjects education program. This includes coordination of a national program of educational workshops, the development and dissemination of educational materials, making presentations and conducting training sessions for institutions and professional organizations, and the development of on-line training materials.

Jeff received his Ph.D. in Experimental Psychology from Northern Illinois University in 1974. Prior to coming to OPRR, Jeff served in the Office for Research at the University at Albany, State University of New York for twenty years. As Associate Director for Research Compliance and Information Management he was responsible for ensuring that all research activities at the university were in compliance with Federal regulations, administered the IRB and the IACUC, and served as Director of the Laboratory Animal Facility. His information management responsibilities included technical support and developing and maintaining database management systems and websites.

Jeff has been an active contributor to national discussion of human subjects issues since 1979, is a highly visible participant at national meetings such as those sponsored by PRIM&R (Public Responsibility in Medicine and Research) and is a past President of ARENA (The Applied Research Ethics National Association).
